INTERESTED IN CONSERVATION?

Earn credits while making a difference!

Round River Conservation Studies is a non-profit conservation research and education organization. Our students work with local people to develop community-based conservation strategies for protecting wild places, while studying conservation biology, natural history, environmental policy, and the culture and history of local indigenous peoples. Take advantage of small group size and gain research experience while making a difference. We promise you won’t forget it!

Learn more about our summer & semester programs!

Visit www.roundriver.org for more information